Dear sir

How can we have faith in the Aurora plan being both reasonable and complete considering their previous executive decisions leading to this disaster for the supply network and the false profit they paid to council. I realise the GM has changed, but the group of executives and department heads that decided or agreed with those previous [REDACTED] decisions can not be relied upon to make the correct decisions in the future. I personally, only working part time, cant pay any more for power. I can only cut consumption, which will bring hardship over winter. As soon as my wife leaves for work I turn all heating and lights off, somehow I need to do more, but dont know how yet. But the network needs the work To move forward they need a group of executives that can move forward without covering their ass looking backwards. So out with the old, bring in the new. Wipe out the history, run with "from now on".
